Brexit poses unique challenges to the EU's decision making. Once the United Kingdom leaves, the carefully crafted balance of powers will change – between small and big member states, eurozone and non-euro countries or proponents of various policies. How important will those changes be and what will be the consequences for the EU decision making? What will be a role of old and new coalitions? And what impact will the new situation have on UK's traditional allies? Those question will be discussed in general EU framework and then with special focus on the CE region and the Czech Republic as UK's traditional ally.
